Description Currently CoCoALib does not permit automatic promotion with operators like +=. This means that one cannot do, for instance, f /= content(f) ; even though f = f/content(f) ; works just fine. This feel inconsistent! There is the question about whether to permit the LHS to be promoted automatically. At the moment I cannot think of a situation where this would be convenient/useful [but that alone is not sufficient to exclude the possibility]. If we do forbid it, then again we have a situation where a = a+b ; has (slightly) different behaviour from a +=b ; Related issues: Related to CoCoALib - Feature #645: Automatic mapping of RingElem: user selec... Rejected04 Nov 2014

I have made a first update (not checked in) which allows the RHS to be promoted, but not the LHS.
Somehow it "feels funny" to allow the LHS to be promoted automatically... but that is not really a good reason to forbid it.

What do you think?

The current impl gives an error if the LHS would be promoted.
I am inclined to accept this impl, and close this issue.
If people object, it should be easy to change the code to allow the LHS to be promoted too.

What do you think?
