Description
Most emacs variables dealing with the CoCoA5 emacs interface are called cocoa5-* but a few do not begin with cocoa5 ( e.g. electric-cocoa5-*).
Why are they named this way? Are there any objections to renaming them to cocoa5-electric-? A quick search showed that similar fns for C mode are called c-electric-

I renamed all functions so they start with cocoa5-
I'll leave this in feedback just to make sure no mismatch comes up.
